THE SYDNEY HUNT CLUB RACES.

THE SYDNEY HUNT CLUB RACES.

THE Sydney Hunt Club will hold its Spring Meeting at Randwick to-day, when some exciting contests are sure to be witnessed. For the Hurdie Race, Daffer and Ptaraigan look best on paper, and they are likely to run first and second in the absence of Deutsful. The Metropolitan Steeplechase is rather hard to pick, as the weights have been very nicely adjusted; but, judged from the doings at the late meeting, Doubtrul, Prior, and Dutfer are likely to fill the place. The Hunt Club Cap should prove an exciting struggle between Runnymode, Sir Watkin, and Receipt; and the places for the numbers' Hundisap may go to William Tell, Hunnymade, and Receipt. Garryowen's late feats at Randwick point to his boing very dangerous for the open Handicap, and after him Westminster, the Dirk, and Baroness are likely to be trouble-some.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1874.

IT will be remembered that some years ago motion was made in our own Legislature for the introduction of provincial government into New South Wales. The motion was founded not so much upon arguments as to the general expediency of the change, as upon the principle that the change was necessary in order to satisfactory legislation upon the land question It was a grave error, argued the mover of th resolution, to have one and the same law fo agricultural districts and for districts essentially pastoral, for the coast lands, and for the saltbush country; and the true course (at least for the saltbush country) was to make it into a province by itself, and give it to make it into a province by itself, and give it the power to frame its own land law. This idea—more plausible than feasible in the case of New South Wales—was borrowed from the policy of New Zealand, where the more thorough detachment of the different settle-ments, and the diversity of their circumstances generally, laid the ground for its adoption with advantage. Under the operation of the Pro-vincial system the opportunity has been afforded vincial system the opportunity has been afforded for fully carrying out experiments in land legis-lation that would hardly have been possible had the question been left in the hands of a central Parliament; and thus, by providing valuable data for comparison, future legislation on a sound basis, and on comprehensive principles, will be greatly facilitated.

It cannot be doubted, however, that the Provincial system has been attended by serious disadvantages. As the General Assembly has drawn off some of the best men from each province, the tendency has been to leave the important business. men from each province, the tendency has been to leave the important business transacted by the Provincial Councils to inferior men. But besides, as the Provincial system is essentially an acknowledgment of the strength of local feeling, so its effect has been to strengthen local feeling in the General Assembly. The members sent by the different provinces have telt themselves the advocates of their special interests. Not that their conduct has been interests. Not that their conduct has been wholly swayed by that feeling. The support given to Mr. Vogen's resolutions by some of the Auckland members proves the reverse of that. But the feeling has undoubtedly had its influence; and to a proportionate extent it has promoted log-rolling, developed that species of political corruption which makes support to a Ministry hinge upon the distribution of public expenditure, and has been conducive generally to bad government. Add to these evils those already advanted to at the causes existed by already adverted to as the causes assigned by Mr. Vocel for the proposed change of policy, and the burdensome cost of maintaining a separate Legislative establishment, with its staff of officials, in every province, and it will be seen that there are weighty teasures.

weighty reasons in support of the change—reasons to be set aside by nothing less than proof that the colony would lose still more heavily by the abandonment of the present But the circumstances of the colony have

But the circumstances of the colony have changed materially since the Provincial system was set up in New Zealand. With the rapid growth of some of the detached settlements, and the substantial progress of all, there is less of the possibility and less ground for fear that the interests of any one would suffer substantially at the hands of a central government. With the development of trade, the construction of roads, railways, and the extension of the means of graphs, and the extension of the steam communication by sea, the detached settlements have become more closely united, and government from a centre has become not only possible, but comparatively easy. The reason d'être of the Provincial system has therefore, in the main been removed. But beyond that, the growth of the colony as a whole, and its growing trade with the colonies of Australia, with the United States, and with of Australia, with the United States, and with a caused, notwith-what are caused responsible toverning and flower-probabile cally the geal and f an expansion in its leading statesmen's range of vision. The machinery that did good service in the early days of the colony is not only no longer required under its altered con-ditions, but is found too restrictive and too obstructive for the larger and bolder policy upon which the colony has entered.

upon which the colony has entered.

And truly when we remember how closely the boldness of Mr. Voorn's schemes (even leaving out of view the Polynesian project) verges upon the rashness of speculation, it may well be said that the time was come for discarding all elements of unnecessary expense, and everything that would tend to distract the Government and weaken the energies and the ment and weaken the energies and the auth-rity of the Central Legislature. The Government of New Zealand, with the General Assembly at its back, must either be content with a narrower and more cautious sit on would be weakened, and stronger sup-port would be gained by introducing bills next session to abolish the Provincial system at one stroke throughout the whole of New Yankania

Or the practical evils which have arisen out of Or the practical evils which have arisen out of the system of conditional purchase, or free selection, as it is commonly called, perhaps not the least important from a social or political point of view is the antagonism of classes. The fact of this antagonism, and its peculiar characteristics, are evinced by the formation of free-selectors' associations, with the avowed object of procuring, by political means, special advantages for their class—by the abnormal litigation which of late years has found its way advantages for their class—by the abnormal litigation which of late years has found its way into Courts of law—and by the tone of extravagant partizanship and prejudice, which in any discussion upon the land question, is apt to infect the language of public speakers and writers. It is true that some antagonism of the sort, that is to say between large and small proprietors, may be said to have always more or less existed in an indefinite shape. Those who have not, envy those who have, and those who have, envy those who have shape. Those who have not, envy those who have have, and those who have, envy those who have more. But the Crown Lands Alienation Act has consolidated this indefinite feeling into a definite shape, and given to what had before been only "airy nothing, a local habitation and a name." The law of conditional purchase has, in effect, created the antagonpurchase has, in enect, created the antagon-ism, by having created the factitious class, which is one of the principal parties to the antagonism. Nor is it too much to say, however parodoxical it may sound, that the definite character of the antagonism is chiefly owing to the indefiniteness of the rights which are the subject of conflict. How could the squatter or pastoral tenant avoid collision with the free selector? The former is invested by law with the nominal rights of a lessee over an area not very definitely described. But how-ever indefinite the area, at least under the cld law, a lease meant something in regard to possession, quite as definite as a freehold, though for a limited but certain period. But the new sort of squatting lease period. But the new sort of squatting lease created by the legislation of 1861 means only a tenure at the will of any person who thinks proper to defeat the lease to a certain extent And this defeasance may, with very slight exceptions, take place in regard to any part of the area. And if a sufficient number choose, it may occur in regard to nearly all the area except improved lands and a small proportion reserved for the lessee by pre-emptive right. The portions thus taken from the area originally leased are, of course, intended to be converted into freetaken from the area originally leased are, of course, intended to be converted into free-holds by the selectors. But this privilege of converting leasehold into free-hold is prohibited, except as above specified, to the lessee, or to any large capitalist or proprietor, in proportion to his means of purchasing, by the condition of personal residence, and by limitation of the area to a maximum of 320 acres. A special class of small proprietors is thus created, which stands in a sort of necessary santagonism to the original lessees, and to all antagonism to the original lessees, and to all large proprietors in general, and which obviously but for the law would never have obviously but for the law would never have existed. And not only is provision made for the creation of this class, but it is invited and encouraged by special privileges enjoyed by no other class of purchasers. Some of these privileges are the obvious and direct intention of privileges are the covious and direct intention of the law itself. Others arise indirectly from the perhaps inevitable circumstances of its administration. Instead of the ordinary cash payment or its equivalent, exacted from other purchasers, the free selector is allowed interminable credit, at a very moderate interest, for three-fourths of the purchase money. And though not strictly a freeholder, being in fact only a freeholder upon what is known in law as a "condition subsequent," the free selector is allowed more than the customary privileges of freeholders as regard adjacent Crown lands. The leasehold of the pastoral tenant is again infringed, and the area guaranteed by his lease curtailed in order to supplement adjacent free selections with what are called grazing rights—that is to say a right of temporary use and occupation over the law itself. Others arise indirectly from the right of temporary use and occupation over three times the area of the selection at the rate usually charged to freeholders, until the area thus occupied shall itself be sold or selected. But this is not all. It turns out in practice, as But this is not all. It turns out in practice, as might have been expected, that the interpretation of both prohibitions and privileges is generally unfavourable to large proprietors and to freeholders, whether large or small, while it is favourable to the free-selectors generally. Perhaps it could not be otherwise under any system of popular Government now-a-days. At any rate no one at all acquainted with the working of what is called responsible Government in this colony, or who has observed its invariable tendency to favour the apparent interests and and prominent position, the legal duties and responsibilities of which there is no evading or escaping. Whereas on the other hand the free-selector is one of a other hand the free-selector is one of a numerous class—not only powerful by its numbers and dangerous for Governments— particularly responsible Governments— to meddle with, but for the same reason supported by a sort of public sympathy, which enables it to offer a passive resistance to, and always more or less to defeat or obstruct the enforcement of penal laws. In short the system encourages and invites a new species of investment and speculation in land, cheaply and system encourages and invites a new species of investment and speculation in land, cheaply and easily obtained, the value of which is liable to be enhanced by the weakness of neighbouring capitalists and of Governments. Under such circumstances how is it possible that there should not be collision of interests and antagonism of classes?

General Assembly at its back, must either be content with a narrower and more cautious policy, or consolidate and enlarge its powers of action. In any case, however, the abolition of the Provincial system would seem to be a step in the direction of cheaper and more efficient government.

Mr. Voget hinted that he was satisfied with the working of the existing system in the provinces of Otago and Canterbury, and added that the people of those provinces need not therefore look upon his proposals in the light of a menace to them. This line of remark appears to show that he felt doubtful of the reception that a more thorough going policy of consolidation be sound, it should be of only partial application. If the principle of consolidation be sound, it should admit of extension to every part of the colony. And, as we have seen from the character of the reception which the resolutions have met out of doors, both from friends and opponents, it is possible that oppoagainst the squatters as a class, were bound in conscience to regard the contingency—which in some cases was a more than average probability—of the best parts of the run being taken away from the lessee, before the expiration of the lease, and consequently entitling the lessee to corresponding reduction of rent. Nor is it a sufficient answer to assert what is newlessless. against the squatters as a class, were be lease, and consequently entitling the lease to corresponding reduction of rent. Nor is it a sufficient answer to assert, what is perfectly true, that squatting investments often show large profits, and that squatting runs occasionally fetch high prices. It is an old law of political economy that profits correspond to risks. And it is the risk of loss from free selection that has caused the deterioration in the value of runs. It often occurs that those who run the risk are fortunate. Their profits are consequently large. And favourable seasons may even swell the average profit upon all such investments for a number of years. But neither particular instances nor particular cases can be fairly taken as criterions of average values, or of average rates of profits, which rather require to be estimated by an inverse ratio. For the very reason that most runs are subject to be invaded by free selection, the value of those, either not at all, or only in a slight degree, subject to this contingency, is proportionately enhanced. And the unusually high price of pastoral produce at particular periods increases the profit of pastoral investment during those periods as compared with others; the real fact being, that the element of uncertainty introduced by free selection into pastoral investment readers it more than ever a gambling adventure, and less capable of being tested by the common rules and calculations of commercial or productive industry. ommercial or productive industry.

mile, the greater part of the distance being up an incline. Work will be resumed again on Monday morning.

TRIALS IN PRIVATE. — The Inspector of Weights and Messures yesterday applied to the Justices sitting in the summons court room of the Central Police Offics, that a case in which he was prosecutor might be heard in the Police Magistrate's room, where Justices were in attendance. Mr. Outley said that the hearing of cases in Captain Scott's room was a very objectionable practice, and one to which he would not give his assent. Mr. Mitchelson said that his only object in making the application was to promote public convenience, for that while he was attending the Court his office was closed; and as there were two Justices in the private room resdy to hear it, he thought that the sitting magistrates would offer no objection. Mr. Hill said that, under the circumstances, he thought no harm could come of yielding to Mr. Mitchelson's application. Mr. Cotley said that, in yielding to his brother magistrate in this case, he hoped it would not afterwards be cited as a precodent against him; for in his opinion it was a course open to many objections, not the least of which was the comparative privacy of the trial, the publicity of the proceedings being to such persons as use frauduknit weights the greatest part of the punishmant. The papers were then sent in, and the case was heard before the Police Magistrate and Mr. John W. Smart.

Sydney City Mission.—Yesterday evening

The papers were then sent in, and the case was heard before the Police Magistrate and Mr. John W. Smart.

SYDNEY CITY MISSION.—Yesterday evening there was a special toe and public meeting in the Temperance Hell, to reorganise the Ladies' Auxiliary to the City Mission. After toe Mr. S. Thompson took the chair. The Rev. Mr. Robinson (one of the hon. secretaries) gave some particulars of the financial condition of the City Mission. He stated that the funds of the society had been greatly diminished by the increased expenditure involved in supporting two additional missionaries who were engaged last year in consequence of the them fourishing state of the finances. During that year the gross income of the society was something less than 2500, and the amount of expenditure for the salaries of missionaries alone was £8.28. The committee desired to retain the services of the two additional missionaries, who had worked with very great seal and beneficial results. If they were retained, the expenditure for salaries alone would be over £1000, the salaries of these missionaries having only come upon last year's funds for a portion of the year. £50 had been given as a domain to by the late Mr. Doublet Jonas. Their liberal and esteemed friend, Mr. Goodlet, contributed the amount of the easily of one missionary. However, if they were on meet the increased expenditure that would be necessary, they would require their treasury to be argoly replenished; and he expressed the hope that Christian people would come forward and sid this society flerally by their contributions. Last year the ladies auxiliary yielded to the funds £171, and it seemed to him that they might look in this direction for a considerable increase. He referred particularly to two or three collectors in connection with the Ladies auxiliary, whose example was worthy the initiation of all the friends of the mission. The meeting was addressed by the Rev. W. Hidley, and by Meeser. Gulley, Freeland, and Druce, city nissionaries. Major Robinson sang several of Moody a

Mr. Baskin, in reply, wrote the following characteristic letter:—"Bome, May 25, 1874. My dear Sir,—I have your obliging letter, but am compelled by increase of work to cease lectaring except at Oxford—and practically there also—for, indeed, I find the desire of audiences to be audiences only becoming an entirely petilent character of the age. Everybody wants to hearmootody to read, nobody to think; to be excited for an hours—and, if possible, amused; to get the knowledge it has cost a men half his life to gather, first awestead up to make it polatable, and then kneeded into the smallest possible pills, and to swallow it homoopathically and be wise—this in the passionate desire and hope of the multilends of the day. It is not to be done. A living comment quickly given to a class on a book they are excessed; we have been writing blessed books till how so both they are excessed to the smallest possible pills, and to swallow it homoopathically ending—this kind of becture is esternally necessary and whoisescene; your modern fire-working, smeach-dawny-oury-and-struwberry-to-end-milk-panch-chtogether lecture is an antirely possiblent and abountable vanity; and the uniferable death of poor Dickman, when he tagkts have been writing blessed books till how so bo, but for the paid-ferous demand of the mol, is a very solemn warning to all; if we would take it. God willing, I will go on writing, and as one are fully seem as he all from the paid of my Oxford lectures, in which every sentence is set down as carefully see may be. If people want to leaver from an let them read them, or my monthly letter—Fore Gosejowa. I fuel for the paid of the pa sill each other, though they do a good deal of cutting and searcing in such fights.

A "MAN I ISH."—The man-fish who was to do such wonders at the Princese' Theatre on Saturday evening (eags a Melbourne Journal) was a great failure. He was to have shopes under the water a mounte and a half.

Mr. Ainsley Scott expressing an opinion he would stop under it for three minutes. Workever he may be able to in be certainly did not accomplish it in Saturday. Dreased in early strice, he made he school; and jumped into a glass part eight feet long by four feet wide and deep, half filled with translucent Yarra water, which did not permit of that he use doing being the clearly seen. He could not see done much, how ever, for he thought the water so neith under he came to the surface and intimated a could not water hand the water, as it was so all that it took away his breath. A boilorall of hot water was then poured into the alk, but it was of no use—the Frenchman could stend it, although one would imagine a man named Pindure' would be partial to "Frond." Mr. Ainsley and then water that the teacher of avitaming at a Sandrigh Baths, who happened to be in the charge, old not come on to the stage, put on Mr. Froidure's see, and stop as long under water as he had done. The early supped at the ofter, when Mr. Scott said: "You lhave to sky under othe minute and a half." The opter of the challenge repliet no man could do so and coffer vas that he chould remain under longer than the self-hid did, and this he was willing to show he could do. Scott, however, did not squee to this, and was again tin possession of the stage.

HE THEATERS.—The interesting drama of a Wandering Heir" has drawn good houses at the oris during the week, and has, in fact, been the test hit of the present season. Miss May Howard has very successful in the dual part of Philipps and ip, while Mr. Belton, Mr. Collier, and the rest of the hasy has well sustained their respective parts. The is placed on the stage with an attention to detail and mount of local colouring that materially add to the twenses of the play. At the Queen's Theatre there been the usual asundance of novelty, including his, singing, and dramatic representations. Barry well is still nightly received with favour; and the wall sisters Duvalli are the recipients of unbounded since. Nataro, the man-fish, has continued to exhibit wondrous subsqueous feats, and last night concluded a successful engagement. The entertainments at the market Theatre have been of the usual sensational a comprising chiefly burlesquees and dramass of a popudaccipition.

REVIEW.

Spiritual Psychology; a new exhibition of the capacities of the human spirit inecestigated and illustrated from the Christian standpoint. By the Rev Grono's Suthernland, Pastor of St. George's Presbyterian Church. Sydney: W. Maddock.

Mitarhusucal studies have of late years enjoyed aomewhat of a revival amongst people of the English race. The national taste has not generally been supposed to run much in this direction, and et Great Reision on shows will of names that will compare the study.

Britain can show a roll of names that will compare not unfavourably with that of any other country. At the same time, it cannot be said that the study has ever Britain can show a roll of names that will compare not unfavourably with that of any other country. At the same time, it cannot be said that the study has ever been generally popular. A certain proportion of mental philosophy has been included in most University curriculums, and young men in their college days are often fascinated by investigations of this character. The strong hold, too, which the Reformation took of the mind of England, and, above all, the Calvinistic development of theology with its determined effort to reason out a compact theological system, and to "justify the ways of God to min," stimulated metaphysical studies. They were still further stimulated by way of reaction, when the aceptical school attempted to undermine religion by rasing metaphysical difficulties. It is searcely possible to name the number of efforts that were directly and indirectly provoked by Hume's treatise on miracles. A similar phenomenon has been noticed in our own times, when the application of metaphysics to theology has generated an unusual amount of ardour. The employment by Mansel of Sir William Hamilton's philosophy to the elucidation of theological problems, stirred up the Rev. Mr. Maurice to the warmest controversy of his life, and we have also seen how the purely secular metaphysics of Mill. Bain, Lewes, and others have provoked innumerable replies from the theological stand-point. The conjunction of metaphysics and theology has thus provok a perpetual stimulant to the study of the former, and this will continue so long as the heterodox think that theology may be attacked on the metaphysical side, and the orthodox think that it may there find a secure defence.

It is to the theological inspiration, that the work before us is due. The author explains in his prefacthat he was led to the investigation of the surject by siarting from the acriptural use of the ward conscience; and in endeavouring to work out a ciear statement of the nature and authority of this more flowed in the study of the provoke, he work of a science presents itself to an independent trinker, was assisted the modern controv-rises with a view to find therein matter both for the vindication of orthomoxy, and for those moral exhortations which are part of the duty of the preacher.

From the advertisement accompanying the volume we observe that one object of the author has been "to present a fresh, attractive, popular volume on a subject of surpassing interest, and one in which ideas are relieved by illustrations on aimost every page." * And, while treating at times the most difficult matters within the range of human investigation, he has sought to use language which the ordinary understanding may readily apprehend. In this effort at popularising his thoughts, the author habeen successful. The style is easy, and fluent, and nowhere obscure, nor need anyone be deterred from reading the volume by the fear of fluding it to abstruce or difficult of comprehension. The illustrations, especially in the first portion, which is mainly descriptive, are indeed apperabundant, and the psychology proper gets so diluted, that the disproportion between the thought and its adornment is apt to remind the reader of Falfstaff's "halfpennyworth of bread to this intolerable deat of sack." For the purposes of the popular preacher, amplification is not only desirable but necessary. The greatmass of untrained minds fly off at a taugent he moment their attention is strained. It is necessary to humour them, to keep that attention long enough for any useful purpose. The pill has to be sugared to get it to go down. Auyone, however, who thinks that metaphysics made easy can be got through with as little effort as in reading a popular novel is grievously mitaken. A amattering, of course, may be easily picked up, but to master the subject there is no avoiding the strong intension of he mind and prolonged reflection. Many, however, may be wood to a first study of the subject thy a creatise written in a popular style, who would be deterned by the bristling phraseology of a more scholas creatise written in a popular style, who would be deterred by the bristling phraseology of a more scholastic book.

Mr. Sutherland recognises the close union between body and mind, and therefore the close union between the sciences of physiology and psychology. "These are sister sciences. They should not be confounded nor should they be separated, they should be studied in succession, first, physiology, and then psychology; the study of the one to the exclusion of the other can only result in a one-sided conclusion." This general accognition, however, of the necessity for basing psychological on physiological studies is all that the latter receives. There is no sketch of the results of physiological studies is all that the latter receives. There is no sketch of the results of physiological studies in all that the latter receives. There is no sketch of the results of physiological study up to the present day, nor any frequent reference to physiological phonemena or laws. The study of mental phenomena is throughout carried out separately and independently. "Sychology occupies now-a-days an intermediate position between physiology on the one side and physiology on the other; and our author, as we have indicated, has approached the subject from the theological side and with theological aims. It is the theology of metaphysics more than its physiology that he desires to illustrate. The latter he leaves to the savans, admitting the importance of their researches. An immense amount of light has been thrown on the operations of the mind by recent studies as to the structure and action of the brain, which is the mind's organ, and it is to the extension of these inquiries that many persons look for the best chance of increasing our knowledge as to the mode of mental operation. Physiological studies, in fact, have given a new zest of inte years to the philosophy of the mind, and a veri knowledge as to the mode of mental operation. Physiological studies, in fact, have given a new rest of inte years to the philosophy of the mind, and a vein has been opened up which promises to be very fruitful. It has always been known that the body affects the mind, and that we have no knowledge of mental action apart from brain action, but there are indications that we are now on the road to a somewhat more minute knowledge with respect to this action, although a perfect comprehension of the accuracy.

the mind, and that we have no knowledge of mental action apart from brain action, but there are indications that we are now on the road to a somewhat more minute knowledge with respect to this action although a perfect comprehension of the nature of this union may be very far away, perhaps, indeed, for ever unattainable.

"Our knowledge," says Mr. Sutherland, "comes through the senses and by independent mental exercises; "that is to say, the basis of psychology as a science is in the exercise of the purely human organs of sensation and thought. In this respect he stands on common ground with metaphysicians of all schools, yet at times he seems to forget it and to fall back upon other autherity. Thus when asserting that man lives apart from his body, he admits that the fact is "outside our present experience is all the experience we have, it is all on which we can base a system of scientific psychology, and any further knowledge we have must be due to some other source of information. The author somewhat contounds his work as a theologian with his work as a metaphysician, and in his mixture of purpose falls into a mixture of method—a combination which detracts from the value of the book as an original investigation. Yet the author desires his book to be considered not merely as a popular exposition of accepted notions, but as an independent and original contribution to psychology, and as in some points carrying the science forward beyond the point previously resched.

In several places he speaks compiacently, and even confidently, of the value of his contribution, but it is doubtful if either philosophy or theology gains much by a confused intermixture of the two, seeing that the method and basis of science. The popular lecturer who sims to explain results already arrived at, and the popular preacher who aims to make moral truth active in the minds of his hearers, have each before them a different task to that of the investigation of truth, who carries his lamp forward cautiously, tentatively, and with much look proper to the third, opinions are the standing point, with the last they are the result.

The title "Christian Psychology" given to the book is virtually explained on the title page to be equivalent to the exhibition of the capacities of the human spirit, investigated and illustrated from the Christian standpoint. But facts are facts from whatever standpoint they are viewed. The phenomena of the human mind are what they are, whether the observer be a Christian or a non-Christian, and in this sense Christian psychology would be no different from Mahommedan psychology. There is, however, a sense in which the term might viry properly be used. Standing as our author does at the Christian atandpoint, and starting from a divine revelation which embodies assertions respecting man's moral and spiritual nature; in fact, starting as he says he did, from the primary inquiry as to the nature and functions of conscience, it is open to collect and tabulate all that can be distinctly said to be revealed with respect to the constitution of man's spiritual nature. This part of the task is, of course, mainly one of exegens, and would consist in collecting the whole of what is asserted, and of getting at its exact meaning by doing full justice to the words and to the context. With you can be sufficiently as a spiritual said as a basis, it is then open to the theologian to deduce by faultiess logic such inferences as a consisting the whole of what is asserted, and of getting at its exact meaning by doing full justice to the words and to the context. With you have been also as a such such a body of doctrine may be fairly styled that the context with the doctrines are broaded in Christian revelation are accessible by the ordinary intellect. It is one thing to illustrate and to verify revelation by reference to human knowledge and observation, and another the context and the context and the context and the corriers while the context and the context and context and the context and context and the context and c

PUBLIC EDUCATION.—THE BISHOP ON CHIMINAL STATISTICS. TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

The there is another fallacy which I will venture for a moment to teler to. That is the fallacy with the there is another fallacy which I will venture if the there is a nother fallacy which is a like of the position assumed by the other side, and the side of the position assumed by the other side, it behaves us to see if the figures in question are fallacious or not.

If you will permit me to add my mite to the controversy, I will andeavour to prove that the figures in question are fallacious or not.

If you will permit me to add my mite to the controversy, I will andeavour to prove that the figures of one of the leading combatants are defective.

I trust, for the sake of the cause he so warmly espouses, that the logic of his Lordship the Bishop of Sydney will tear a stricter sensity than his figures (although I have my doubts), but I will leave my friend Mr. Greenwood to dispose of that portion of the subject, as I purpose doing with the figures.

His lordship said, on Monday last, as reported in the Herathi:—

"Then there is another fallacy which I will venture for a moment to teler to. That is the fallacy we are percetually hearing—that hereans acquainted with the three K's are less likely to commit crims than those who are ignoranted them. That lutterly denies, and for correctness I will quote the exact words.

The Bishop says:—"Take one hundred persons, and of these 160 you may take face-thirds on the one side, and one-third on the other-7-75 to 25. Now, according to this notion that a knowledge of the three R's will keep a person from crime, on which side would you expect to find the unedicated." Of course on the side of the 75. No—exactly the contray. The returns from Drillinghurst gaol and the Supreme Court will show that out of 100 criminals 28 are unadusted, and that 75 are able to read and write."

Metely noteing 16 is not according to "Cocker," I beg to say that I do not believe his Lordship intended to missed his Merely noticing, in passing, that the Bishep's idea of of 100 being 25 is not according to "Cocker," I beg to say that I do not believe his Lordship intended to meissak his audience; but, as his remarks were so loudly cheered, I presume the bulk of his hearers took in and fally appreciated the Bishop's apparent demolition of the criminal fallacy argument. But the important basis on which a correct estimate, and thus possibly a sound argument, might have been produced was entirely omitted. His Lordship, unfortunately, in selecting his 100 persons, selected one-hundred criminals, instead of taking a given number of the population, or, what would have been better, the through the population of criminals, educated and uneducated, to the whole population. Now, if the Bishop's figures we have the astounding result—that one-third of the whole adult undation does not possess the advantage of the three R's."

This statement may do for the platform to a sympathing statistical contents of the light of day; and, the three R's!

This statement may do for the platform to a sympathising studience, but will not bear the light of day; and, before making the assertion, or publicly making the denial, the Bishop should have had worked out for him, at the nearest Denominational school, the following sums:

1. What is the propertion of criminals to the whole population? population?

2. The yield of criminals from the uneducated portion of

2. The yield of criminals from the uncomment persons the population?

3. And the yield from the educated class?

Had this been done, the figures, which can be proved by reference to the cencur returns, would stand thus:—

1st. That instead of there being one-third of the population unable to read or write, there were only $5,000 out of $60,000, or one-seventh.

2nd. That the criminal yield from this $5,000 (taking Mr. Stuart's figures as correct), was $4356, or fee per cont. of the unclusted.

3rd. That the criminal yield from the remaining population of $45,600 was only $4695, or barely one per cent, of the educated.

tion of 475,000 was only 4698, or barely one per cent, of the educated.

In other words, that one-seventh of the entire population, forming the uneducated, gives nearly as many criminals as the remaining six-avenths—the educated portion. But place the criminal yield from the whole population in Darlinghunts goal, and then let the Bishop select his 100 criminals, and you will find the error into which his lordship has failen.

I am eure the Bishop's audience, on reflection and calculation (if one of the Ke in question has not been omitted from their curriculturs), will see on which side the fallacy exands, and I believe his lordship him-sif will not endorse the only interpretation which can be put on his remarks, as they appear in print—that education, so far from decreasing crime, really increases it.

Yours faithfully,

W. W. BURT V. AUNTRALABIAN AND AMERICAN MAIL STRAMBHIP COMPANY.

This was an application, on petition for a rule nisi, for the requestration of the estate of the Australasian and American Mail Steamabip Company. Mr. Manning, instructed by Mr. Shepherd, appeared in support of the rule, and Mr. Salomons, instructed by Mr. Lavy, appeared for the Company, as emicus curia.

His HONOR and there was yesterday presented to him in chambers a petition by William Way Burt for the sequestration of the estate of the Australasian and American Mail Steamabhip Company. The prayer of the petition was that the estate of the company may be sequestrated for the basefit of creditors. This proceeding for a rule nist for compulsory sequestration was an experte matter, but where there were any matters of difficulty requiring to be as-isted by arguments of commel or attorney, he had consistently adjourned it from time to time for hearing in the Court-room; and, as upon the face of the proceedings and the petition, which named mixed yes a partner, and which did not aver that the company was point stock company within the usening of the Act Il Vic. No. 19—under which alone he had, the had consistently the proceeding to the proceedings and the petition, which named mixed yes performed to the matter to be entered into to-day to allow concast or attorney, or petitioner to be heard. This being an experte matter be could not hear any body else.

Mr. MANNIXO admitted that this was a matter which was out of the ordinary run, and that the austral difficulties are previously that the would show sufficient grounds for obtaining the rule mist at all sweets, even if it were capable of being upset afterwards. The petition stated that "a certain September 1 was a matter which was a substeam and American Mail Steamabhip Company, was indebted, "Well, there was an allegation that there was a company trading it Sydney, in the olouny of the petition with the require of the petition w of certain words in the petition might oc. Supposing these words were in it, "and the said Hayden Hasekiah Hall, heing a partner of such company, contracted debta." His Hoxot pointed out that a petition for sequestration had been already submitted in the case of Hayden Hezekiah Hall. He would let the petitioner go into the box, but it accmed to him that this was the most experimental sort of proceeding he had ever heard of.

William Way Burt, aworn and examined, deposed that the signature to the petition, dated the 17th instant, for the sequestration of the setate of the Australasian and American Mall Nessathip Company was his, and the affidavit was his. He was the same William Way Burt that petitioned against Hayden Resekiah Hall, of this city; the signature to the affidavit is worn on the 14th instant was his, and on that petition and affidavit the order has made on the 14th instant of the provisional sequestration of Hayden Hazekiah Hall's estate. £107 17s. 6d. is the same identical debt in both. That order misi for texturable on the let October.

Mr. MANING submitted that there were abundant of Hayden Harkinh Hall's estate. £107 17a. 6d. is the same identical debt in both. That order misi is returnable on the lat October.

Mr. Maxnino submitted that there were abundant authorities to show that the fact of the Court having given an order for the sequestration of an estate would not prevent the Chief Commissioner from giving an order for the sequestration of a joint estate; and that was the case bare. Mr. Hall's estate would be liable to a certain extent, but they wished to go beyond that, and get the cetate of the firm sequestrated. They distinctly alloged that the result of Hall's going away was not only to defraud his creditors but defraud delay, and prevent the payment of the oreditors of the Australasian and American Mail Stemmship Company. He thought the case clearly came ander the 17th section of the Act.

His Henor said there was not the semblanes of a company on the petition, and consequently there could not be anything upon which an order nis could attach either in law or equity. Until they prayed for the sequestration of people destinctly manned, and unless they were a company, it appeared to him that it would be ridiculous to ack for an order of Court. Even if they argued that Mr. Hall was a partner, the enswer would be "Yes; but you have already sequestrated his private estate for the same identical debt." If they did not amme anybody, how could an order be apartic. It came a may body, how could an order be apartic. It was utterly impossible to sequestrate an maknawa catity unless it were proved to be a company with as a joint stock company, within the meaning of the 11th Vic., No. 19. He sismissed the petition, and ordered the balance of the 5c deponit to be returned to the petition.

The Import markets move slowly, as there are still difficulties in the way of forwarding goods to the interior. Orders for export have been more numerous, and there is a fair demand for town trade requirements. Breadstuffs have been more numerous, and there is a fair demand for town trade requirements. Breadstuffs have receded in value, and we heard to-day of wheat being offered at 5s. 6d. to 5s. 10d. Flour in trade quantities sells at £13 to £14, according to brand. Bulk ale is very firm up to £7 2s. 6d. for small parcels of best brands. Bass, bottled by Porter, was quitted at 12s. Inferior bottled scarce and wanted. Building materials in better supply. Lumber has not recovered the recent sales at auction. Cement has been sold at from 19s. 6d. to 20s. 6d. Coffee is unaltered, Is. 4d. still required for No. 1 plantation. Dried fruits improving in view of the approaching seasonable demand. Eleme raisins are more plentiful. For Dandee goods the demand continues very light, and prices unsatisfactory. Groceries and oilmen's stores move slowly at late rates. In fish the only noticeable change has been a speculative inquiry for Californian salmon, and large sales up to 10s. 6d.; holders now require 10s. 9d. to 11s. Lobsters promise to be deares. Hops may be considered out of the market for a time, though a sale at 2s. 3d. has been reported. Malt is steady and quotations unchanged. There has been inquiry for galvanized iron at higher values; £38 has been paid for Gospel Oak. Fencing wire also sells more readily, and yellow metal has advanced to 10½ sales. Naval stores are high and stocks light. Oils have not altered in price; kerosene plentiful and low yet. Provisions, such as English hams, bacon, and cheese, command extreme prices, very little being in first hands. Rice very firm and cheese, command extreme prices, very little being in first hands. Rice very firm at the recent improvement. There is a moderate inquiry for new teas at prices more favourable to importers than were obtained at auction. Via Torres Straits mail, we learn that further clearances had been made at Foochoo for this port, and that prices were unchanged. Of sugars, we have to note the sale of 5500 baga Mauritius, ex Neptune, by auction, at a shade lower than previous sales.

The record of transactions in the Stock and Share market during the past week has been rather meagre. Buyers of Bank shares have swinced less inclination to meet the market, so that less business was done than we have had to report for several weeks. City remain steady at 10½. Commercial, fully paid, advanced to 89, with a bare market, and new shares sold at 61. New South Wales not quite so strong; sales at 52½, sellers at that figure. New Zealand have an improving tendency, 18½ paid, and 18½ asked. Queensland National are looking up; the market has been cleared of all offering The record of transactions in the Stock and the market has been cleared of all offering under 5; and holders now require 6. Deben-tures have not been dealt in for some days, buyers of long-dated New South Wales fives at 108. Insurance shares are firm, holders declining to make any concessions. General have been quitted at 40s. Sydney Marine at 13s., and wanted; 22s. refused for Pacific. In

The exceptional circumstances under which this first-class city property has been brought forward for public competition should render this sale worthy the special attention of the capitalists or public compenses of this city; possessing as it does all the requirements of sin office for a large mercantile establishment or public company, it cannot fail to command such a return by way of rental as must render it a highly profitable investment. Comment as to its position is needles; the inprovements which are being carried out from day to day in the immediate locality point clearly to its increasing importance. It is only necessary for the auctioneers to add that the sale is bons-fide, and that they invite the closest inspection, feeling sure that but few properties in this city can shand the feet better.

RAYNES, TREEVE, and CO., in bringing so important a property into the market for POSITIVE SALE, would invite the special attention of those who are on the look out for investments to the secting character of the one now offered to public competition. Requestion can possibly arise as to its position, surreunded as 4t is on avery side by first-less estates. It possesses in addition every possible convenience as a city family protisence, combined with the most perfect retirement; and it is but seldon that opportunities occur of securing an estate so near the centre of the city of such an area; whilst, should the intention be to subdivide, no better or more profitable speculation could be found than the purchase of the House BOCK WALL ESTATE, the land being specially adapted for that purpose.

The instructions to effect a sale are most imperative, and the property will be seld in ONE LOT.

Carles to view may be obtained from the auctioneers, at Mort's Rooms.

The COUNTRY is equal to any part of this truly beautiful district, the adaptability of which (or cattle breeding is tuniversally admitted; and this station has the advantage of being abundantly watered by numerous and swanps, the richness of the country around which for cattle feeding cannot be equalled.

The CATTLEs are well known to rank amongst the best herds in the colonies, and their quality may be judged by these who have not seen then by the neighbouring brands, such as the Diamond D and Shield-cattle; and a PUEK. BRED BUILDS from the lives breeders of ENOLANI, VICTORIA, and NEW SOUTH WALES have been been kept up to the highest possible pitch compatible with quality and weight. There is a large rumber of FAT-CATTLEs there on the run, the breed being chairly Durham. In submitting this valuable property to the public, we food its own merits must be the best consmensation, and any remark at the hands of the auctioneers would only de-mess from, weber than add to its value.

Barnes, Faulks, and Wright, on which is contained the five great seams of coal, varying from 3 feet and 23 feet to 30 feet, cropping out.

Terms at sale.

The auctioner would call particular attention to the above advertisement, from the fact that this block of land forms the key to the immense area of coal ground on the tableland, now taken up to the extent of thousands of acres by Sydney capitalists. The situation is easy for transit, lying as it does at the head of the main valley wil Jamberco, with a workable gradient to the mine. The quality of the coal, although only surface now, is superior, and by competent judges is considered autiable for all purposes. That forming the centre of "the great Mi Kansie seam" is pronounced "highly birmainous"—equal to that of Newcastle. The time to operate as an investment is now available. Whoever cubraces this opportunity is sure of a fortune. Coel shares are new commanding more attention than ever; and, with the prospect of direct communication with Victoria, a bright commercial vitures may be looked for. The proprietor will show the mins to intending purchasers.
